FOREWORD TO THE SECOND EDITION

This is the second edition of the comprehensive bibliography about the Serbs in the United States and Canada, compiled by Robert P. Gakovich and Milan M. Radovich, and published in 1976. Since the publication of the first edition, these two librarians have continued to collect material with devotion and professional competence. The result of a joint effort is this volume, which is now complete and up-to-date. In addition to the items found in the first edition, this volume contains material which was missed in the first edition and everything that was published from 1976 till 1990. There is almost twice as much material in this edition as compared to the first edition. In addition, it contains a directory of all Serbian Orthodox churches and monasteries in the United States and Canada.

This comprehensive bibliography, the only one of its kind, serves two purposes. First, it is an indispensable tool to all who study Americans and Canadians of Serbian origin and their history and contributions to the United States and Canada. It is intended to assist American and Canadian scholars in tracing the roots and history of Serbian immigrants, whose contributions to America should not be overlooked. It serves as a testimonial to the American and Canadian Serbs in their dual effort, for more than a century, to preserve their culture while, at the same time, contributing to the culture and the well-being of their adopted land. Second, this bibliography also shows the literary creativity of the American and Canadian Serbs, in either Serbian or English, which is impressive indeed considering the fact that the Serbs represent one of the smallest ethnic groups on the North American continent.

The first edition of this bibliography was also well received in Yugoslavia, especially by the Serbian Academy of Sciences. It will greatly assist the Serbian Academy, which is involved in a study of the publishing activities of the Serbs in the entire diaspora. As the interest in the Serbs who have left their country for various reasons and over many years grows in the country of their origin, this bibliography will be of invaluable scholarly importance.

This work could not have been completed without the encouragement and generous support of the Memorial Library of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, and the Immigration History Research Center of the University of Minnesota and its director Dr. Rudolph J. Vecoli.

FROM THE FOREWORD TO THE FIRST EDITION

The present volume is the most complete bibliography to date, in any language, that deals specifically with the Serbs in the United States and Canada.

The Serbs are one of the peoples of present-day Yugoslavia, along with the Croats, Slovenes, and other nationalities. While none of these ethnic groups has an absolute majority, the Serbs are the most numerous single group, comprising just over 42 percent of the total population of Yugoslavia. During the first great wave of Serbian immigration to the United States, roughly between 1890 and 1914, there was no Yugoslavia. Few Serbian immigrants of that era came from the relatively prosperous Kingdom of Serbia. Rather they flocked from the economically depressed areas of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and the poor mountain Kingdom of Montenegro, where want, harsh living conditions, a growing population, and, in Austria-Hungary, an alien rule drove them to the Promised Land of America. How many came is impossible to say with any certainty since official American statistics deal with the country of origin rather than with ethnic identity. The prevailing guess one encounters in the literature of that time is 100,000. Between the First and Second World Wars there came a second wave, smaller than the first, though again, statistics are lacking since, by then, Serbian immigrants were lumped together with Croatian, Slovenian, and other newcomers from Yugoslavia as the "Yugoslavs." The third wave of Serbian immigrants to the United States was driven to these shores as the flotsam and jetsam of the Second World War, when thousands of homeless refugees and political opponents of the new Communist regime in Yugoslavia sought a haven here, and a new country. Estimates of the total number of Americans of Serbian descent today, including all three waves of immigrants and their progeny, range between 250,000 and 300,000. Though this number is small by comparison with many other ethnic groups in the United States, the Serbs of America are proud of the contributions in many fields which they have made to the larger American society.

Because the Serbs comprise only a minority of the total Yugoslav immigration to the United States and Canada, perhaps no more than a third or less, they have not been as fully treated as the Croats and the Slovenes, either in survey works or in bibliographies. Nor has such a bibliography been published in Yugoslavia. It is this gap that the two authors of the present volume have attempted to close.

This bibliography was conceived as part of a larger project in connection with the observance of the Bicentennial of the United States. A group of interested American scholars of Serbian descent formed the Serbian American Bicentennial Committee of Wisconsin and the Midwest. Among its projects the Committee entrusted me to undertake and to coordinate several works dealing with the history of the Serbs in the United States. It was immediately perceived, however, that such a work required sound bibliographical preparation. To provide this, the Committee commissioned the present two authors, Robert P. Gakovich and Milan M. Radovich, both librarians at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, to compile a bibliography as well as an index to the AMERICAN SRBOBRAN, the leading Serbian newspaper in this country for the past seventy-five years. (This Index was published in 1980). Both enterprises have received generous support. The University of Wisconsin Memorial Library made it possible for both authors to work half-time for over a year solely on these two projects, and it has provided them with a special room and facilities, all as part of the Library's own contribution to the Bicentennial effort.

Special recognition is also due to the Immigration History Research Center of the University of Minnesota for making possible the publication of the bibliography, thanks to a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities which enabled the Center to match funds provided by the Serbian American Bicentennial Committee of Wisconsin and the Midwest. Both authors and I have become increasingly convinced that the Immigration History Research Center is the natural repository for all documents, newspapers, and other materials dealing with the history of the Serbs in the United States, for this Center provides the facilities, the expert staff, and a scholarly environment to all scholars and other interested people.

I. BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, ARCHIVES, AND SELECTED ARTICLES

The material in this section of the bibliography is organized in subject groupings. The Table of Contents provides a list of the subjects used. The works are listed alphabetically within each subject group. An alphabetical Author Index is provided at the end of the volume, indicating the page or pages on which the author's work or works can be found.

Technical limitations did not permit the use of the Cyrillic alphabet. Thus, Cyrillic citations are given in their Roman alphabet equivalents. Serbian Roman alphabet character "Đ" was also not available. Instead, its Roman equivalent "DJ" was used throughout the book.

It should be noted that an effort was made to include only works by or about the Serbs who were citizens of the United States and Canada, or who permanently resided in these two countries. However, there were some intentional or unintentional inconsistencies. For some individuals it was difficult to determine the country in which they permanently resided. On the other hand, works of the prominent Serbian emigrant Lazo M. Kostich were included, although he did not reside on the North American Continent. It was felt that his works were, for the most part, published in the United States and Canada and were considered an important source for the study of the Serbs on this continent.

Finally, it should be pointed out that items in this bibliography may be located by consulting catalog holdings of major libraries in the United States, Canada, and Yugoslavia and the national and international computer data bases such as the OCLC. As is well known, the publisher of this bibliography, the Immigration History Research Center of the University of Minnesota, has a major collection of material for the study of various ethnic groups, including the Serbs. Items that can be found in its fine collection are marked at the end of a bibliographic citation with the initials "IHRC."

II. THE SERBIAN ETHNIC AND EMIGRE PRESS

1869-1990

The history of Serbian journalism in the United States and Canada is long and varied. During the more than one hundred years since the first Serbian language periodical appeared, more than 200 political, cultural, religious, fraternal, or independent periodicals have followed in its footsteps. At present, twenty-seven periodicals are being published. Among them is the dean of the Serbian newspapers, THE AMERICAN SRBOBRAN, which has been published continuously from 1906.

The first Serbian journal to be issued in the United States was called SLAVENSKA ČITAONICA (SLAVIC READING ROOM); it was started in San Francisco in 1869. Its publishers were Montenegrins and Dalmatians who had organized a literary and library society, the first such institution among South Slavs on this continent.

The second Serbian newspaper, also in San Francisco, was called THE GREEK-RUSSIAN SLAVONIAN (or EASTERN ORTHODOX SLAVONIAN); it made its appearance in 1870. Other papers, with their founding dates, were the following: SRBIN AMERIKANAC (THE SERBIAN AMERICAN), 1893; DRAŠKOVA SLOGA (THE DRAŠKO'S CONCORD), later called SLAVIANSKA SLOGA (THE SLAVIC CONCORD), 1893; SLOBODA (LIBERTY), 1893; SILNI DUŠAN (DUŠAN THE MIGHTY), 1897; SLAVENSKO JEDINSTVO (THE SLAVIC UNITY), 1897; and NEZAVISNOST (INDEPENDENCE), 1900. All were based in San Francisco. It would not be inappropriate, considering the exclusive concentration of early Serbian journalistic activity in that city, to call this, late nineteenth-century stage, the "San Francisco Period."

The second stage in the development of the Serbian American press corresponds to American industrialization, especially from 1900 to 1930. It might well be named the "Pittsburgh Period." During these years the Serbian immigrants flocked to the newly industrialized areas ranging from New York to Chicago. The Serbian political, social, religious, and fraternal organizations and their organs sprung up and flourished all over the region. During the first part of this period, between 1900 and 1914, no fewer than fifty Serbian periodicals were founded.

The World War I period saw another twenty-four Serbian-language newspapers come into existence in the United States. The period between World War I and the onset of the Great Depression of 1929 witnessed yet another sixteen Serbian-language newspapers.

In the "Pittsburgh Period" some of the most important and best-edited Serbian newspapers appeared, such as, SRPSKA STRAŽA (THE SERBIAN GUARD); SLOBODA (FREEDOM); SRPSKI DNEVNIK (THE SERBIAN DAILY); SRBOBRAN (THE SERB DEFENDER); AMERIKANSKI SRBOBRAN (THE AMERICAN SRBOBRAN); KANADSKI GLASNIK (THE CANADIAN HERALD); RADNIČKA BORBA (THE WORKERS' STRUGGLE); and UJEDINJENO SRPSTVO (THE UNITED SERBDOM). Altogether, there must have been about 100 Serbian-language periodicals during this period, three of which were dailies.

The third, and most recent, phase, the "Chicago Period," derives its name from the greater Chicago area, where most of the Serbian American organizations were located. Historically, this period can be divided into two parts; the first covering the Depression and the war years, from 1930 to 1945, when twenty-four Serbian periodicals were founded; and the second, the post-war era, when another forty or so periodicals were added. The main reason for this substantial increase was the great influx of new Serbian immigrants, consisting mainly of World War II political refugees.

In the course of more than a century, Serbian newspapers and other periodicals varied in scope and character. They have ranged from dailies to annuals, such as calendar-almanacs, and from the radical left to the radical right. All the pre-World War II Serbian immigrant periodicals ceased to exist, with the exception of two newspapers, AMERIKANSKI SRBOBRAN and GLAS KANADSKIH SRBA, which survived unchanged through many years. The last Serbian socialist newspaper in this country, RADNIČKA BORBA, ended its career in 1966. The average birth rate of these periodicals of two per annum was matched by an equally high death rate. The increased mobility of the immigrants, caused in part by shifting patterns of industrialization, brought about the dispersal of many settlements; and, as they melted away, so, too, did their periodicals and newspapers.

In the 1980's, the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe ended the post-World War II political emigration of the Serbs to the United States and Canada. This, in turn, will have an effect on emigre political organizations and their publishing activities. Numerous Serbian emigre periodicals have already ceased to exist and the remaining few will most likely follow suit shortly. Future Serbian ethnic press will most likely be different in style and content and it will most likely be bilingual, oriented toward the next generations of Serbian Americans and their ethnic and cultural needs.

This section of the bibliography is arranged in two parts: CEASED NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS and CURRENT NEWSPAPERS AND PERIODICALS. Entries are identified by title, place of publication, publisher, date, current editor, frequency, and circulation, if known. The language of the periodical can be determined by the language of the title or of the first title in case the title appears in two languages. If it is bilingual, this is so stated. The location and holdings of individual titles can be found by consulting national periodical bibliographies for copies either in the original or on microfilm.

For additional sources concerning the Serbian ethnic press and sources used in preparing the periodical section, see Chapter VIII, PRESS AND BROADCASTING, in this bibliography.

III. DIRECTORY OF THE SERBIAN CHURCHES AND MONASTERIES IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

The Serbian churches and their church halls serve as religious, cultural, and social centers for the Serbian communities in this country. They publish their local church bulletins as well as histories of their churches and their parishes. These important publications are locally preserved and they may be obtained by inquiring from individual churches.

The churches which are under jurisdiction of the Free Serbian Orthodox Diocese for the United States and Canada are distinguished by the letter "F," located after the name of the church.
